Foreign Press Association Picks New Officers for '66

The election of David Horowitz as president for 1966 of the Foreign Press Association was announced yesterday. He is the New York correspondent of the World-Union Press, a news agency with headquarters in Tel Aviv, and the Heruth Daily, a Tel Aviv newspaper.

Mr. Horowitz will succeed Edwin Tetlow, former correspondent here for The London Daily Telegraph and now a freelance journalist here.

The association is composed of about 450 foreign correspondents in this country, mostly in New York. They work for the press, radio and television.

Jeffrey Blyth of The London Daily Mail and Jean-Paul Freyss of Agence France-Presse, a news service, were elected vice presidents. Others named were John Cappelli of the Rome newspaper Paese Sera, general secretary; Pal Ipper, representing Hungarian radio and television, assistant general secretary, and Horacio Estol of the Buenos Aires newspaper Clarin, treasurer. All are based here.
